a hand up

When you support step 13, you're not offering anyone a handout, you're offering a hand up to men who have proven their willingness to take responsibility for their lives and work their way back into society.

At step 13, we're proud to be 52% self-sufficient without taking federal, state, or city funding. We're trying to raise that number. But until we do, we rely on people's kindness to fill out our budget. We need money to offer services to the homeless men we take in off the street. We need money to expand our businesses. And we need money to cover our everyday expenses like gas and electric bills. click here to donate in-house businesses

Our in-house businesses serve very important roles in the self-sufficiency of step 13 and the rebuilding of lives.

The fact of the matter is it's hard to get a job after living on the street. Our program gives a person that all important first chance and re-constructs work ethics to the highest standards. The people working on your projects will be courteous and professional and guided by expert staff. Our quality is unmatched because each man that works on your project is working for more than just a paycheck; he is working on the step 13 team, and he is working for the future of the team and himself.

Step 13 is not about handouts, it's about results. When you are doing business with us, you are doing so because you need quality work and competitive pricing. Quite frankly, the fact that you are helping put people's lives back together should never be a decision point--you are in business, so are we.
